

NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

Edilberto N. Alegre is a full-time cultural field researcher and writer. He has written books on oral history (The Writer and his Milieu, 1984; Writers and their Milieu, 1987); food and culture (Sarap, 1988; Kimilaw, 1991; Inumang Pinoy, 1993); and language (Pinoy Forever, 1993). Before he embarked on his cultural explorations all over the Philippines, he was a professor of comparative literature at the University of the Philippines.

Walden Bello is a professor of Sociology at the University of the Philippines, and is also the co-director of Focus on the Global South, a program of policy research and analysis at Chulalongkorn University in Thailand. He is the author of several books, including Development Debacle: The World Bank in the Philippines (1982), Dragons in Distress: Asia's Miracle Economies in Crisis (1991) and Dark Victory: The United States, Structural Adjustment, and Global Poverty (1994). He was an active participant in the national debates on the ratification of the Uruguay Round on the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

Onofre D. Corpuz is professor emeritus of Economic History in the School of Economics, University of the Philippines. He holds a PhD in political economy and government from Harvard University. Professor Corpuz has written extensively on public issues and Philippine history, in addition to having held positions such as UP President and Secretary of Education. His latest book, on the economic history of the Philippines, has recently been launched by the University of the Philippines Press.

Emmanuel S. de Dios is a professor of Economics and director of the European Studies Programme, University of the Philippines. He also serves as fellow for the Center for Integrative and Development Studies (CIDS). His research interests include international economics, industrial organization, economic development and theory. A book he co-edited, Choice, Growth and Development: Emerging and Enduring Issues (1996), is reviewed in this issue by Solita C. Monsod.

Benjamin E. Diokno has an MA in Public Administration from the University of the Philippines, an MA in Political Economy from Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore and a PhD in Economics from Syracuse University in New York. He is currently teaching at the School of Economics, University of the Philippines. He held extensive government posts in the past which included serving as Undersecretary of the Department of Budget and Management (1986-1991), Chairman of the Local Water Utilities Administration (1990-1991) and Fiscal Adviser of the Office of the Senate President (1993-1995).

Amando Doronila is a columnist and editorial consultant of the Philippine Daily Inquirer. He was formerly editor-in-chief of The Manila Chronicle. He is currently a fellow of the Program on Democracy, College of Public Administration, University of the Philippines. He holds a master's degree in politics from the Monash University, Australia. His book, The State, Economic Transformation and Political Change in the Philippines: 1946-72, was published by Oxford University Press in 1991.

Raul V. Fabella is a professor of Economics and Director for Research at the School of Economics, University of the Philippines. His main research interests in the field of economics include team theory, rent-seeking theory, and studies on industrial organization and the exchange rate. Besides teaching, he is also involved in several publications such as the Journal of Economic Behavior and Organization, the Asian Economic Journal and The Economic Journal.

Milagros C. Guerrero is a professor of History at the University of the Philippines and finished her PhD at the University of Michigan. Her research interests include the 1896 Philippine Revolution, historiography, peasant and women studies.

Notes on Contributors

Caroline S. Hau is a Fulbright scholar who received her master's degree from Cornell University where she is currently finishing her doctoral dissertation. She teaches at the Department of English and Comparative Literature, University of the Philippines, writes and publishes short stories, and is a member of Kaisa Para sa Kaunlaran.

Carolina G. Hernandez is a professor of Political Science, University of the Philippines and president of an independent think tank, the Institute for Strategic and Development Studies, Inc. Her articles and monographs on the military in politics, regional security, Philippine politics, foreign relations, and democratization have been published widely. She is affiliated with a number of prestigious international academic institutions and think tanks and is an active participant in the region's non-formal track of studies and discussions that help shape official policy. She served in the Fact-Finding (Davide) Commission that investigated the failed coup of 1989.

Paul D. Hutchcroft, assistant professor of Political Science at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, was recently based in the Philippines on a Fulbright-Hays research fellowship. He has written extensively on Philippine politics and political economy, and is the author of a forthcoming book entitled Booby Capitalism: The Politics of Banking in the Philippines. His current research examines central-local government relations in the Philippines in historical and comparative perspectives. The essay published here was adapted and updated from a talk delivered at the Special Consultation on APEC, Cebu Plaza Hotel, Cebu City, May 24, 1996.

Jomo K.S. (Jomo Kwame Sundaram) is a professor in the Faculty of Economics and Administration, University of Malaya, Kuala Lumpur. He has an MPA and a PhD from Harvard University and was a visiting professor at Cornell University. Among his publications on economic issues are A Question of Class (1988), U-Turn? Malaysian Economic Development Policies After 1990 (1994) and Southeast Asia's Misunderstood Miracle, ed., (1997).

Gonzalo M. Jurado received his PhD in Economics from the University of Wisconsin and is currently Senior Research Fellow at the Philippine Institute for Development Studies and consultant for economics and statistics to the Asian Development Bank. He was lecturer at the United Nations Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific, Statistical Institute for Asia and the Pacific in Tokyo in the 1980s and was a professor of Economics at the University of the Philippines.

Maria Claret M. Mapalad is an assistant professor in Economics, University of the Philippines. She received her BS and MA degrees from San Jose State University in California and her PhD from the University of California. Her areas of specialization are development economics, macroeconomic and monetary theories, and financial development.

Felipe M. Medalla is a professor and Dean of the School of Economics, University of the Philippines. He holds a doctorate degree in economics from the Northwestern University in Illinois and has written extensively on various key economic issues such as debt management, the exchange rate and Philippine economic growth.

Solita C. Monsod is a professor of Economics, University of the Philippines. She served as Director-General of the National Economic and Development Authority from 1986 to 1989. She has a regular column in the Philippine Star and is also a TV news personality.

Temario C. Rivera is Maximo Kalaw Professor of Political Science at the University of the Philippines. His most recent work is a monograph, Philippines: State of the Nation (1996) published by the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies (ISEAS) in Singapore, containing his interpretations of the most important socio-economic developments in the Philippines during the last twenty years. His book, Landlords and Capitalists: Class, Family and State in Philippine Manufacturing (UP Press, 1994) was awarded a prize by the Manila Critics' Circle and is reviewed by Maria Claret Mapalad in this issue.

Ramon Villegas, a graduate of De La Salle University, is a writer and antiquarian. His social commentary and essays on art history have been published here and abroad.